The tsunami on December 26, 2004 has rightly raked up a variety of issues, dominantly conceptual; also there are consequential upshots which need to be considered in terms of futurities on such phenomena. The paper deals with a brief critique of developments in this direction. With this as part of the layout, it seeks to pose some relevant problems that need to be addressed. Then it proceeds to set forth a model approach with its raison d'être and salients. The societal foci are not dispensed with. The basic objective here of presenting an analytical approach has been set forth against the backdrop of globality of concerns and the vulnerability of the areas of occurrence. That a synergy of culture and scientific temper is called for permeates throughout the paper.
