

AWAKENING OF ENVIRONMENTAL ETHICS

BISWAJIT MUKHERJEE*

Interest in environmental ethics is growing in recent times. This philosophic approach is documented in the present article to give the readers new ways to consider and understand environmental issues. This article presents environmental ethics as a hybrid of both ancient and recent insights, more so as a discipline in the making. The instance of environmental understanding of the Harappans, Romans, Egyptians, Persians and others is accounted here. The present-day environmental concept of sustainable development highlight the current consciousness of mankind in matters related to environmental protection. In short, the article combines a deep understanding of the environmental ethics with a sociological and political examination of environmental happenings and their reasoning.
